The Directorate-General of Social Rehabilitation (DGRS), as the public service responsible for juvenile justice, has the following mission: (1) to contribute to the definition of the criminal policy, especially on the areas of youth's social reintegration and prevention of criminality; (2) ensure the technical assessment to Court to aid in their decision-making in juvenile justice cases; (3) ensure the execution of juvenile justice sentences; and (4) ensure the management of Educational Centres and other facilities dedicated to the youth's social reintegration.

Being committed to the qualification of the juvenile justice's intervention, DGRS, is part of the European Programme PREVENTION OF AND FIGHT AGAINST CRIME, through the VALERE Project.

The VALERE Project began in 2007, and the thematic areas under its analysis have been collecting information that allows evaluating the need of improvement both on young offender's assessment, as well as their social reintegration needs, in order to achieve the qualification of the proper answers towards their behavioural change and recidivism prevention.
